ABSTRACT

A method for controlling priority inheritance in a computer system is described, the method including testing a priority inheritance variable associated with a task, and lowering the current priority of a task when testing the priority inheritance variable indicates that the task holds no resources that are involved in a priority inheritance.